Not illustrated. 1909 Excerpt: .subject nor expressed any desire to know the American views, he did not consider it necessary for the representative of the United States to engage in a political debate which the unsettled aspect of the war had elicited--and later he added that the Monroe doctrine had no application in the cases of recruiting which he had mentioned.- Though not apprehensive of the rumored intentions of France to seize Texas or form an alliance with the Confederates, Seward, pointing out the danger of collision between France and the United States (and other American republics) which might result from the adoption by France of a policy in Mexico antagonistic to American opinions, stated that the American government, not unobservant of the progress of the events would not likely neglect such protective measures as every sovereign state should provide for use when nations cease to respect their moral and treaty obligations. Though instructions were issued (November 23, 1863) to the army in the Southwest enjoining forbearance from intervention in Mexico, Seward suggested that the Emperor should make a reliable guarantee of the informal statements of Lhuys. Consistently adhering to the policy of neutrality, and the Monroe doctrine, which would leave the destinies and sovereignty and independence of Mexico in 7 Desps. Switz., No. 50, Oct. 2; 1 Instrs.
